

HOW TO CARE?

Care Area Preparation:

Provide enough space for your chickens. The right size of the rearing area depends on the number of chickens you want to raise.

Make sure the area has adequate protection from the elements such as rain, sun heat, and wind.

Remove things that could be a danger to chickens such as sharp objects, chemicals, or poisonous plants.

Choosing the Right Type of Poultry:

Choose a type of chicken that suits your purpose. For example, if you want to use them for egg rearing, choose a variety that produces good egg growth.

Know the right amount of chickens you want to raise and make sure you have enough space for them to grow.

Providing Adequate Food and Water:

Make sure your chickens always have enough food and water. These are important for their health and egg production (if that's your goal).

Try commercial feeds that have the right nutrients that chickens need, or you can also provide natural foods such as vegetables, corn, etc.

Disease Treatment and Pest Preparation:

Know the main diseases and pests that can affect your chickens and learn the right measures to prevent and treat them.

Have regular check-ups on chickens and consult a vet immediately if symptoms of illness are seen.

Regular Cleaning and Replacement of Equipment:

Keep their care area clean and tidy.

Change their bedding (such as sawdust or lungs) at regular intervals to prevent diseases and inflammation.

Regular Observation and Care:

Take enough time to look after your chickens and make sure they are in good condition.

Treat them with love and care to maintain their health and productivity.

Proper chicken care requires patience and dedication. It is also important that you have knowledge of their care and be prepared for any challenges that may come with raising chickens.
